Type in Motion 2.0

Whether it be on the computer screen, on television or in the cinema, the digitalisation of everyday life had meant that we are confronted everywhere with words, sentences, and even entire texts that move. With great inventiveness artists make use of many different kinds of appliances with dynamic typefaces. As a result they both expand and change our ways of reading the world. We react more attentively, on a small surface we receive a large amount of information – which is also constantly updated – or we are entertained in a surprising way. The rhythm of such texts is often adapted to the music or the sounds that we hear at the same time. Music videos, advertising spots and short films, trailers, eboards and media facades, digital postcards and logos from all around the world introduce us to the extensive universe of moving lettering. Through experiments with text that are presented as interactive installations, the exhibition also ventures a look into the future.

The exhibition was updated in 2015.

Social Design

A loom to start a business, a do-it-yourself house, or a solar kiosk for local power supply: social design is design for and with society — and highly topical. The consequences of the global growth economy are becoming increasingly severe for both human beings and the environment. Social design confronts the increasing imbalance of resources, means of production, and future opportunities and relies on a new, equitable exchange between the individual, civil society, the state, and the economy. Against this background, architects, designers, craftsperson, and engineers are all developing solutions.

This exhibition presents relevant international projects and discusses the redesign of social systems, as well as of living and working environments.

Out to Sea? The Plastic Garbage Project 3.0

Plastic – a material for eternity? Since the start of the 20th century this mineral oil based material has proceeded in a triumphal march through the world of consumption. But what happens to a plastic product at the end of its lifecycle? Ever since mass-produced plastic products have made our lives easier, the sea has gradually begun to change into a gigantic soup of plastic—every year more than 8–12 million metric tons of garbage reach the oceans. Today plastic is everywhere: on the open sea, on the sea floor and on beaches. There it not only disfigures the beauty of nature and leads to economic losses but also has alarming effects on nature, animals, and ultimately also on our health. This exhibition aims to convey facts about the plastic pollution of our seas and rivers in an illustrative way, to examine important questions in this context, and to animate consumers of plastic goods to take action. This exhibition presents facts about plastic garbage in the sea and illustrates the dimensions of this ecological catastrophe. In addition, the exhibition examines various questions such as the advantages and disadvantages of using plastic products, the considerations of product design, the potential of recycling, and the impact on health. Possible solutions are grouped around a series of Rs: reduce, reuse, recycle, recover, rethink, redesign... and aim at encouraging plastic consumers to take action.

The exhibition was updated in 2018.

Le Corbusier by René Burri

René Burri (1933 – 2014) helped shape the history of photography in the 20th century. Many of his images, such as the cigar-smoking Che Guevara, are known throughout the world. René Burri, born in Zurich in 1933, is one of the most important photographers of our time. He studied in Hans Finsler's legendary photography class at the Kunstgewerbeschule Zurich (School of Arts and Crafts) and found his own visual style early with his portraits and reportage photography. Before he undertook countless journeys to the scenes of world events as a member of the renowned Magnum photo agency, he produced two powerful photo series on the chapel of Ronchamp. Particularly in 1959 and 1960 he concerned himself intensively with the work and character of Le Corbusier, who was already regarded as the epitome of the architect. Museum für Gestaltung Zürich was able to acquire over a hundred valuable vintage prints – including numerous photo icons – from Burri's Le Corbusier portfolio. This wonderful treasure forms the core of the exhibition, which also includes previously unknown color photos and other items from Burri's collection.

Weingart Typography

Wolfgang Weingart is regarded as the “enfant terrible” of modern Swiss typography. At an early stage he broke with the established rules: He freed letters from the shackles of the design grid, spaced, underlined or reshaped them and reorganized type-setting. Later he mounted halftone films to form collages, anticipating the digital sampling of the post-modern “New Wave”. As a typography teacher at the Basel School of Design Weingart shaped several generations of designers from 1968 onwards. They came from throughout the world and helped him achieve international recognition. Weingart’s experimental design approach and the connection between analog and digital techniques that he called for are topical again today. His life’s work is shown and juxtaposed with works produced through his teaching activity. All the exhibits come from the Museum’s own collections, as the designer donated a major part of his archive to the Museum. In the meantime this material has been electronically recorded and systematically analyzed as part of a research project led by the Institute for Cultural Studies of Zurich University of the Arts and supported by the Swiss National Science Foundation.

Protest !

Globalization, women's rights, Trump: the poster has established itself as an effective medium for political struggle. 50 years after 1968, the onset of a worldwide rebellion, this exhibition presents around 300 international protest posters. The spectrum ranges from Käthe Kollwitz's emotional appeal against war to the legendary messages of the Parisian Atelier Populaire and contemporary political manifestos. The designs dismantle rulers, denounce injustice, or lend utopia a face. They are instances of visual memory, appeal to the necessity of resistance today, and prove the topicality and universality of the depicted themes.

Accompanied by protest songs, videos, and images from virtual space, the exhibition showcases the work of socially engaged designers and illuminates various strategies of protest.

Alexey Brodovitch

From revolutionary Russia, to the theatre of new perspectives that was 1920s Paris, and finally to New York and the world of high fashion, Alexey Brodovitch's creative energy was both absorbed and cultivated by unlimited opportunities. As a designer and photographer, he displayed a Renaissance-like mastery of the graphic arts, but it was one that was never codified into a consistent visual theory. Rather, he approached each new project with the attitude "If you know yourself, you are doomed". It was as Art Director of Harper's Bazaar and teacher in his famed Design Laboratory, that Brodovitch translated the avant-garde ideas of European modernism into the vernacular tropes of American commercial culture. With photographers and designers who entered his sphere of influence, he continually pushed them to excite and provoke, never to simply satisfy. The photographer who absorbed most completely the lessons Brodovitch imparted was Richard Avedon. Over a period of 15 years, Avedon and Brodovitch worked together at Harper's Bazaar and produced the iconic photobook Observations (1959). A relationship that encapsulated the 20th century journey of radical design and photography from Europe to America and back again.

Votes & Voices Swiss Campaign Posters 1918 – Today

Ever since the foundation of the federal state in 1848, the Swiss population has been actively involved in political decision-making through the rules of direct democracy. Popular initiatives and referendums form the basis of municipal, cantonal or federal plebiscites. Time and again, the issues at stake make feelings run high and lead to fierce ideological battles. Testimony to these disputes are campaign posters, which have sought to influence public opinion since the early 20th century. Clichés, undifferentiated simplifications, a repertoire of drastic motifs and catchy slogans correspond to the laws of the medium, whose aim is direct mass manipulation. Over time, however, many well-known artists and designers have also created posters that have imprinted themselves upon Swit-zerland's collective visual memory and have become icons of Swiss poster art.

The Votes & Voices exhibition presents visual argumentation strategies and a pictorial rhetoric that have shaped Swiss campaign posters from 1918 to the present. As sensitive indicators of socio-political moods, and as valuable contemporary documents, the exhibits reflect not only the history of Swiss mentality but also global trends.

Knowledge In Images – Information Design Today

A picture is worth a thousand words: The exhibition Knowledge in Images is presenting current examples from the broad range of applications of information design.

Information design conveys complex ideas in a simplified form and allows us to navigate the flood of information in our daily life.

Never has so much information been exchanged as today. Whether for visualizing big data, publishing journalistic findings, spatial orientation, or as material promoting effective learning and teaching – information design explains the most diverse contents within the shortest time through combining much visual material with few words.

Images have the power to simplify and illustrate complex facts. But precisely because information design must lend itself to intuition, its objective form may also contain manipulated contents. The exhibition presents this topical area of visual culture in printed and moving images and makes immaterial knowledge playfully experienceable through interactive installations, for example about the threatened heritage of Asian martial arts.
